Tenley “Ten” Lockwood has spent the past thirteen months locked inside the Prynne Asylum. The reason? Her refusal to let her parents choose where she’ll live after she dies. There’s an eternal truth many have come to accept: Firstlife is merely a dress rehearsal and real life begins after death. And Ten must live long enough to choose where her soul will reside.

When Rosie Wolf wakes up in a strange hospital bed, she learns she’s died in an accident and is nowhere near Paradise. She’s left to deal with the Grim Reaper, who isn’t a man in a black cloak, but a beautiful woman with a bad attitude.

The Reaper tells Rosie that before she can move on and see her deceased father, she has to go back to Earth and collect three souls. But Rosie quickly realizes her task isn’t so simple...

Sixteen-year-old Echo Stone awakens in a dark room in a cold sweat. She soon learns she’s in Middle House, an orphanage for troubled kids. There’s just one problem: she’s not an orphan. And nobody will listen to her explanation. Echo manages to escape and rush home only to find it sealed off by crime tape and littered with the evidence of a terrible, violent crime. Realizing her current deceased state, Echo embarks on a quest to solve her own murder and reclaim her stolen life.

Over one hundred years ago, Emma Rose Finnis died in the remote northern California town she now haunts. In life, she was a lowly chambermaid and worse, a Finnis. And her afterlife isn’t any better: in this town where phantoms are considered “unclean”, the spirits have already been removed. All except Emma. When a hunter arrives with a mission to extinguish her once and for all, Emma refuses to give up without a fight. After all, she’s got nothing to lose, unlike the living around her.

Seventeen-year-old RJ always gets what she wants. So when her soul is accidentally collected by a distracted Grim Reaper, somebody in the afterlife better figure out a way to send her back or heads will roll. But on her quest for mortality, she becomes a pawn in a power struggle between an overzealous archangel and Death Himself. If she wishes to reclaim her lost future, she’ll have to do as the tribunal says and take a walk down memory lane. How hard can changing her future be?

The Kinsey sisters have an uncommon family. Their parents are former hippies who still don’t believe in rules of any sort. So without any authority in their lives, the three girls have only each other to rely on. Rachel is wild. Asha is lost. And Sarah is the glue that holds them together until her sudden death sends her fractured family into a tailspin of grief and confusion. Asha has questions, Rachel has secrets. And Sarah must piece together how she came to the afterlife.
